Saab has long reached the end of its journey as a brand. It gave us so many awesome cars starting with the Saab 99 Turbo, the series, the series and including just about everything in between. However, the fact that Saab is no longer churning out new cars doesn't mean its support infrastructure is goon too. There's still a bunch of their cars driving around all over the world. Without a live manufacturer to offer backup, it's important to maintain your vehicle using genuine Saab parts or their OEM equivalents. Let's find out why. To say that Saab had a good run would be an understatement. Its story is one of innovation, opportunity and ultimately betrayal, just like any good European drama. Saab Automobile was founded back in when Saab AB decided to build a small, economy-oriented vehicle. Mind you, Saab AB is a Swedish defense contractor that made and still makes things like fighter jets, missiles, naval radar systems, and other weapon systems. Needless to say, the car branch of this company had a good background in engineering, solving problems on the go and generally building things to mil-spec standards. All of these attributes and more would end up shaping Saab into a unique brand that it was. The company operated fairly well until when it went under. Why such a tragic, and some would say sudden, end? That's where the betrayal part comes in. This company was run by GM since and many diehard fans will tell you that this moment signifies the end of Saab. To cut the long story short, GM wasn't really sure what they wanted to do with Saab as they already had brands that sold well in the same categories of the market. In the end, they borderline mothballed the whole line of vehicles which is often cited as the grand betrayal on GM's part. Despite these cars' turbulent past, they're solid machines. However, they require proper maintenance and occasional service. With the company out of business since , it will only get more and more difficult to keep these vehicles on the road. That's why it is imperative that you only use quality parts , preferably genuine Saab or OEM. Here at eEuroparts. We understand that maintaining vehicles like these takes some effort. With our selection of parts , you're not just getting a reliable source of spares for your car. No, you're getting the best quality parts at the best possible prices. Whether you drive a series , a series or a , we have you covered. There's no better way to maintain or service a car than to use parts made by that specific car manufacturer. Such parts are called genuine parts. Despite being out of business for over a decade, there are still plenty of genuine Saab parts in circulation. What makes genuine parts so special is the fact that they are made to manufacturer's spec. Each component that bears the 'genuine' label has been made from the highest quality materials, meets strict manufacturing standards and has passed rigorous quality control. Getting a genuine replacement component is the best way to maintain or fix your car. In an odd case that a genuine part isn't available , the next best thing are OEM parts. No car manufacturer is capable of manufacturing every single car component for every single model. In order to cover the demand, manufacturers outsource a good portion of spare parts productions to 3rd party manufacturers. Both of these categories are made in the same factories, using the same materials and following more or less the same manufacturing standards as well as quality checks. The biggest difference is that you're not getting the extended warranty that comes with genuine parts. With that said, OEM spares come with a warranty of their own. If you're a proud owner of a , or other older Saabs , chances are that you're maintaining a high mileage engine. High mileage vehicles require higher levels of care in terms of lubrication as you're working with engine components that have suffered a certain level of wear. We strongly recommend that you use Motul lubricants in your Saab. Motul is one of the leading oil and lubricant manufacturers in the world. Their knowledge and expertise draw from over half a century of hands-on experience. Motul's fully synthetic oils are proven to improve engine lubrication, reduce wear, reduce fuel consumption and prolong the overall lifespan of your engine. If you're looking for the right kind of brake fluid, look no further than Brembo. Being one of the few brands that can rightfully call themselves an authority when it comes to automotive brake systems, Brembo offers just the kind of brake fluids your car needs. Get Brembo's DOT 5. We offer a whole range of Brembo parts , including pads and rotors.
